Peck Predicts Pending Satellite Merge Will Be Approved

Radio Ink July 17, 2007

Analyst Robert Peck of Bear Stearns is predicting the pending merger of Sirius and XM Satellite Radio will be approved.

Peck elaborates on why he's thinking the merge will happen, saying that during the past 30+ days since the FCC clock started, a number of entities have filed their comments both for and against the proposed merger. In reviewing the petitions to deny, we did not find any significant issues that had not been raised earlier during the congressional hearings or the FCC process.

Peck continues, writing that we should expect the companies to go beyond just rebuttal and discussion on competition as the XM/Sirius reply likely will contain concrete proposals on public benefits.

In their response, we believe XM/Sirius will not only rebut the arguments raised by the entities petitioning against the merger, but likely will go beyond just discussing the competition in the audio market. We expect the companies to go into more detail about their proposals regarding a la carte, price guarantees, block and rebate, reduced pricing for basic packages, as well as pricing for the best of both drawing regulatory focus towards the tangible consumer benefits that will arise from the merger.

We believe the merger likely will be approved on merits. There has been a lot of debate on whether the proposed merger between XM and Sirius would be allowed to proceed by the DOJ/FTC and the FCC. After attending several congressional hearings, reviewing recent FCC filings, speaking with various legal and political contacts, and working through the merits of the merger proposal, we believe the proposed merger is likely to pass regulatory hurdles with appropriate concessions. We underscore though, if political forces are more powerful than the merits of the deal, the outcome may be different. However, our sense is that the deal will be judged on merits and is therefore likely to pass. Our opinion is in fact a vote of confidence in the FCC and DOJ, who we believe will base their decisions on what's best for consumers and the American public.

XM-Sirius Deal Receives Church's Blessing

WSJ: Deal Journal

Posted by Dennis K. Berman

It is still unclear how Washington will view the proposed coupling of satellite-radio operators XM and Sirius.

New York Archbishop Edward Cardinal Egan, however, is throwing his support behind the deal, saying in a New York Post commentary that it will help the dialogue of faith continue.

Indeed, both XM and Sirius have opened up their offerings to a range of religious programming, with each carrying three separate Christian channels. One of those is The Catholic Channel, programmed in conjunction with Cardinal Egan's own Archdiocese. (Never mind that Sirius also carries the less-than-pious Howard Stern.)

Cardinal Egan is just one of many well-known people who have thrown public support behind the deal and who also have programming relationships with one of the two companies. The list includes Steven Van Zandt, who produces Sirius shows including one called Underground Garage and Robert Finkelstein, who heads Frank Sinatra Enterprises, which began a Sinatra channel on Sirius in 2006.

As Cardinal Egan sees it, the merger will offer consumers more choice at lower prices. He goes on to say that it would permit even more Americans to experience satellite radio.

He also liked the idea that the merger would bring about technological changes that would offer listeners the ability to block channels that some listeners may find offensive.

Yea Chorus on XM-Sirius Grows

The number of XM-Sirius Yea-sayers is increasing by the day.

A group of Bear Stearns analysts led by Robert Peck has become at least the second group of researchers in less than a month to make a prediction that until recently few dared to venture. Peck & Co. predicts the much-doubted proposed merger between Sirius Satellite Radio and XM Satellite Radio Holdings will pass muster with regulators after all.

(Before the deal can go through it must be approved by the U.S. Justice Department and Federal Communications Commission.) Late last month, Merrill Lynch predicted in a research report that regulators would turn away anticompetitive gripes by terrestrial radio competitors. Merrill put the odds of approval at 60%.

The cause of Peck's enthusiasm? After attending several congressional hearings, reviewing recent FCC filings, speaking with various legal and political contacts, and working through the merits of the merger proposal, we believe the proposed merger is likely to pass regulatory hurdles with appropriate concessions, he writes in a report distributed today. He predicts that the companies will bolster their case by going into more detail that they have in the past on price breaks they would offer customers as a combined company.

Shareholders of both companies seem to want the deal to pass because of the opportunities for cost cutting and increased efficiency it promises. They seem to be warming to Bear's and Merrill's case. As the tide of previously strong antiapproval sentiment has turned in the past couple months, XM stock is up about 20%, while Sirius has risen roughly 17%.

The Good Word Via Satellite

New York Post

By Edward Cardinal Egan

July 20, 2007

At a recent West Coast dinner held on behalf of Catholic University, a man approached me to remark on the extraordinary breadth and depth of programming he heard day after day on The Catholic Channel on Sirius Satellite Radio. He and his wife never miss my weekly program, he told me; they enjoy listening to the various hosts discuss the world around them from a Catholic point of view.

A bishop, an old friend who leads a diocese outside of New York, wrote me to say that he thinks The Catholic Channel is exactly what the church needs to communicate with people about what the church is and what it teaches. Another friend, a Jewish woman from New York, told me that she had been listening to The Catholic Channel and was struck by how much common ground our faiths share.

The influence that the channel already has achieved was also driven home a few days ago, when a first-time visitor to the Cathedral of Saint Patrick asked an usher, "When is Monsignor Ritchie saying Mass today? I heard him on Sirius . . ."

Spreading the Good News is a primary mission of the church. As Pope Benedict XVI stated in this year's World Communications Day message, "Above all, the church desires to share a vision of human dignity that is central to all worthy human communication. This is what we're trying to achieve each day with The Catholic Channel."

The Catholic Church has always sought a variety of ways to communicate with the faithful. Conventional media have long made a place for religious viewpoints, but it is increasingly limited (and this publication is no exception). Radio has historically provided a forum for religious programming—but the more recent homogenization of content has largely left religious content at the outskirts.

This is why the Archdiocese of New York quickly and enthusiastically responded to Sirius' invitation to launch The Catholic Channel. And this brings me to a topic that is far from the usual fodder for those of us called to serve the church: the proposed merger between Sirius and XM Satellite Radio.

In Washington and elsewhere, many people much more expert than I in these matters are working diligently to examine the merger. From my perspective, however, it offers a unique opportunity to extend the reach and breadth of religious programming. It is also an unmatched opportunity to strengthen this new medium and position satellite radio to compete with the ever-growing list of audio entertainment providers.

Every day, The Catholic Channel reaches across the country and provides an opportunity for Catholics and people of faith to feel more connected to their God. Nor is it the only religious programming on satellite radio.

Both Sirius and XM offer a range of religious shows and channels—and they've promised to offer consumers more choice at lower prices after the merger. Service offerings that let subscribers pay less would permit even more Americans to experience satellite radio.

Moreover, the companies have promised that a key component of the merger will include the ability to block channels that some listeners may find offensive and the merged entity will offer a rebate for those channels as well.

As my bishop friend so accurately observed in his brief note to me, The Catholic Channel and Sirius Satellite Radio present a unique opportunity for the church to speak with people—Catholic and non-Catholic alike. I would urge all those who are considering the Sirius-XM merger to see to it that this dialogue of faith can continue.

Edward Cardinal Egan is the archbishop of New York.
