Questions & Answers about Wisconsin Energy Corporation's Acquisition of Integrys Energy Group
Aug. 6, 2014
FINAL

1. I understand that Wisconsin Energy is acquiring Integrys, but why do I see and hear the word “merger”?

You see the word “merger” a lot because that’s the legal, technical term for what happens with the legal entities at closing. However, after closing WEC shareholders will have the majority interest in the combined company with 72% ownership compared to 28% ownership by current Integrys shareholders.

2. Will WEC’s upper management meet with smaller districts/locations?

We anticipate there will be meetings with WEC leaders as part of this process. These meetings could have some form of face-to-face sessions that include video or audio connections for employees who can’t be on site. We’ll be sure to let employees know any details as they become available.

3. Will the new company, WEC, be allowed to hire UPPCO employees prior to the 2 year agreement between Integrys and BBIP?

After closing, WEC steps into Integrys' shoes with regard to contractual obligations, including the non-solicitation obligation we have with BBIP in the UPPCO agreement. This would include WEC's current subsidiaries, We Energies and W.E. Power.

4. When the merger occurs, the ESOP will receive shares of WEC stock plus cash for each share of Integrys stock. What happens with the cash portion according to the ESOP plan document? Does the cash remain in the employee's account or does it get invested into more WEC stock?

We do not have the specific answer to this question. How the cash is handled inside the ESOP is a decision that the WEC team will make.

5. How many dollars are estimated for the costs to achieve this merger?

Since the term “costs to achieve” can mean a lot of different things such as actual costs incurred to reach this stage of the merger process, additional expenditures related to the various regulatory approvals needed, or costs to achieve defined synergies among others, it is difficult to answer this question. What we can share is that both companies are incurring costs resulting from financial advisors, outside legal support and related matters. WEC discussed costs associated with the pending acquisition on its recent earnings call. Integrys will be disclosing this at its upcoming second quarter earnings release and will be disclosing an update to these costs at each quarter until the merger transaction closes.

6. My workgroup has a number of questions related to pension, such as:

- Will the pension plan change to eliminate or change the amount of the lump sum, change the amount of the annuity, or change any of the current annuity options for surviving spouses?
 - Can WEC change our minimum retirement age/eligibility?
- Can WEC change the pension benefits I currently have if I am over 55 now and decide to retire post-close?
 - Can WEC change the pension benefits we currently have accrued, if we are not yet 55?
 - Will I still get my pension supplement if I retire after the acquisition?

Changes to pension benefits generally must be made prospectively, or effective in the future. Previously earned benefits (other than the pension supplement) are protected under ERISA rules. ERISA is the federal law that governs pension plans. Remember, it is very early in the process. There will be plenty of time to get answers to these questions. We'll share information as soon as it's available.
