Employee FAQs

What are the specifics of this deal?

Under the terms of our agreement, AT&T has agreed to pay $107.50 per Time Warner share, half in cash and half in AT&T stock.

Time Warner will become a subsidiary of AT&T and Jeff Bewkes will stay on as CEO of the Time Warner businesses to ensure a smooth transition.

Our company spun off Time Warner Cable because vertical integration was not the right strategy for us. Why are we selling Time Warner to AT&T, which is another distributor of content?

We're in a different time and in a significantly different media environment today than in 2009 when we spun TWC.

AT&T provides a vastly larger national and international footprint across multiple platforms. Indeed, with this deal we gain access to a ubiquitous U.S. distribution network with 133 million mobile subscribers, 25 million pay TV subscribers and 16 million broadband subscribers.

AT&T is the largest provider of pay television services in the U.S. and the world and also a leader in mobile and broadband services.

At the time we owned Time Warner Cable, it was a regional cable company with a reach of only about 12% of U.S. households.

This deal allows us to accelerate our plans and reach consumers directly on every platform across the country. We can launch innovative products and services more quickly, and at greater scale, than would otherwise be possible.

What is the process and timing for this deal to close?

The deal will require approval by our shareholders and by various regulatory authorities.

We expect the process to take about a year.

What happens to projects we've been working on while waiting for the deal to be approved and closed?

Today it is business as usual. As the transition progresses business plans may evolve and we will update our employees as we have more information.

While we work through this transition, we will be counting on our employees to stay focused on continuing to drive our businesses forward to meet our 2016 and 2017 strategic, business, and financial goals.

We do recognize that ambiguity is challenging and we will have resources available to help including our Human Resources and Change Management teams as well as our Employee Assistance Program

Are you worried that the clash of cultures between a communications company and a media company?

Not worried at all. Our companies' cultures are very similar despite the fact that our headquarters are geographically diverse.

Additionally, both are companies with long histories of innovation – we go back nearly a century to the first feature film with sound, AT&T dates back even further to Alexander Graham Bell and the invention of the telephone. Like us, their company has transformed itself over time to lead and define its industry.

AT&T's senior management is committed to ensuring our businesses thrive in the combined company, with even greater opportunities to innovate.

Does this mean I will lose my job?

AT&T is making this investment because it believes in the strength of our assets, quality of our content and, most importantly, because it believes in the leadership and competencies of our people.

AT&T understands that we have the expertise to continue our industry leading growth – an expertise that they do not have.

While there may be some changes to come it is too soon to know of any specific organizational changes.

In the event I did lose my job, what would the severance package be?

Each division has a severance plan(s) that will remain in place for at least two years after the close of the transaction.

The general terms of these plans are available on your division's employee intranet.

Will we still move to Hudson Yards?

The business case to consolidate into one building at the Hudson Yards remains strong and we're continuing with our plans to move. However, in light of today's announcement we will need to evaluate our options for consolidation of our facilities when the merger is approved by shareholders and regulatory authorities.

What will happen to my benefits?

We are in the process of negotiating the details of the transfer of benefits and fully expect the compensation and benefits packages to be similar to those in place throughout Time Warner today.

What should I say if I get a call from a reporter or a business contact?

Speaking to the press as an official authorized representative on behalf of the Company should only be done with the prior approval of, Time Warner's Corporate Communications or Legal Departments.

No Company employee should offer public comment on the deal as an official authorized representative on behalf of the Company unless specifically authorized to do so by Time Warner's Corporate Communications or Legal Departments.

If you receive a call asking about the deal you should refer them to the Time Warner Corporate Communications department at 212-474-7482.
